Let's think it through together!

1. "The hungry pirate slowly swam." — when you read this aloud, is your voice calm and steady, loud and excited, or rising like a question?

2. "The lake was still and quiet at dawn." — when you read this aloud, is your voice calm and steady, loud and excited, or rising like a question?

3. Read this sentence in your head: "The plane landed safely on the runway." Should your voice sound calm and steady, loud and excited, or rising, like a question?

4. Read this sentence in your head: "What a tiny monkey!" Should your voice sound calm and steady, loud and excited, or rising, like a question?

5. Read this sentence in your head: "How clever that mountain is!" Should your voice sound calm and steady, loud and excited, or rising, like a question?

6. Read this sentence in your head: "The lake was still and quiet at dawn." Should your voice sound calm and steady, loud and excited, or rising, like a question?

7. "The library closes at five o'clock." — when you read this aloud, is your voice calm and steady, loud and excited, or rising like a question?

8. Read this sentence in your head: "What a icy sister!" Should your voice sound calm and steady, loud and excited, or rising, like a question?

9. "Look at the size of that shark!" — when you read this aloud, is your voice calm and steady, loud and excited, or rising like a question?

10. "The gentle mountain heavily built." — when you read this aloud, is your voice calm and steady, loud and excited, or rising like a question?

You did it — great work!
