📖 The Wall Project

Casey's class was assigned a group project on a mural for the library wall, due at the end of term. Everything was progressing well until two group members disagreed strongly about the overall direction of the project. Worried the deadline might slip, Casey explained the situation to the supervising teacher. After hearing the details, the supervising teacher had both students present their ideas and let the class vote. The group worked quickly to make up for lost time, splitting tasks so nobody fell behind again. When the project was finally presented to the class, nobody could tell anything had gone wrong along the way. Casey later said the experience taught the group more about problem-solving than the project topic itself.

1. What was the project about?

2. What went wrong during the project?

3. Who did Casey ask for help?

4. How was the problem fixed?

5 Did the group finish the project on time?

6 Answer all three (separate with commas): What was the project about, what went wrong, and who did Casey ask for help?
