1

Answer both (separate your two answers with a comma). 1) Read: "It is often claimed that electric vehicles are no better for the environment once battery production is considered. Nevertheless, lifecycle studies consistently show electric vehicles produce less total emissions over their lifetime." Which word signals the shift from the opposing view to the writer's rebuttal? 2) Read: "Some believe four-day school weeks shortchange students academically. On the other hand, several trial districts report steady or improved test scores alongside better teacher retention." Which phrase marks the transition into the counterargument's rebuttal?

2

Answer all three (separate with commas). 1) Read: "Some say museums are outdated in the digital age. Nonetheless, visitor numbers at interactive museums have grown every year since 2019." Which word signals the shift from the opposing view to the writer's rebuttal? 2) Read: "It might be argued that stricter phone bans limit students' independence. Even so, most teachers report that classrooms without phones are calmer and far more focused." Which phrase acknowledges the opposing view before it is challenged? 3) Read: "Opponents argue that banning junk food ads during children's TV hurts broadcasters financially. Still, several countries that introduced the ban report no measurable drop in overall advertising revenue." Which sentence presents the counterargument the writer will challenge?

Answer both (separate your two answers with a comma). 1) Read: "Some argue that remote work weakens workplace culture. On the contrary, many teams report feeling more connected through deliberate online check-ins than they ever did in a busy, noisy office." Which phrase marks the transition into the counterargument's rebuttal? 2) Read: "Some claim that space exploration wastes money better spent on Earth's problems. Yet many everyday technologies, from satellite weather forecasting to water purification, trace directly back to space research." Which word signals the shift from the opposing view to the writer's rebuttal?
